TO JOIN RED SOX.

Larry Gardner Will Travel with Big Leaguers Next Month.

Burlington, May 12.—Larry Gardner, who last year captained the varsity baseball team of the University of Vermont and who covered short field whirlwind fashion, will leave for Boston after commencement week, to join Red Sox team of the American league. Larry has worked out with the squad here and expects that he is able to fill a gap with the major league team when needed.

He has been in Boston recently and once that might have caused his not joining the squad training trip have been I. Taylor, owner and manager of the Red Sox, Mr. Gardner remains the club of the club there would be awaiting him.

He wants a sub and a man to come in. Gardner an out-in get 's and out of this.

He was born on an emigrant wagon route to the great state of California.

Then as aspirant for congressional is able to tack a war record on career, it undeniably helps. The biography in the directory of men—that of Representative

HOW TO BECOME A CONGRESSMAN.

What a Study of the Congressional Directory Reveals by Way of Information.

The proud mother who wants her son to grow up and become a statesman can gain valuable information as to the proper procedure by consulting the Congressional Record. The biographies of the representatives of the people give the clue.

In the first place, the aspiring parent ought to choose the honest, rugged name of William. There are more congressmen with this cognomen to the square inch in the House of Representatives, than any other—50 out of the total of 393. John is also a favorite, with 37 bearing that front name in the present membership. But William is better. "Bill" sounds good with the masses.

Thirty-one members answer to the name of Charles; 28 to that of James; 17 were baptized Joseph; 15 bear the surname of George; there are 11 Henrys, 10 Thomases, 7 Roberts, and the same number of Franks, 5 Edwards, 4 with the historic "George Washington" as their two first names, and one who scorns adornment and calls himself plain "Jack"—Beall, of Texas.

Then, too, the far-sighted parent should carefully choose an occupation for the child destined for congressional fame. By all means he should be a lawyer—there are 245 legal lights in the present House, which is away and above every other profession. Second choice is newspaper work. Twenty graduates of journalism or proprietors of newspapers are members. There are 16 who confess to farming in their biographies, 14 bankers and 9 lumbermen for manufacturers of forest products. There are three telegraphers, two practicing physicians (who, by the way, always get well advertised whenever anyone is suddenly taken sick around the House chamber as "Dr. So-and-so, a member from Such-and-such-a-state, attended the patient,") and one actor—Julius Kahn of California, who still affects a poetic flowing tie and is given to gestures. Of course, it's possible for men with other professions to break into Congress—John E. Tener of Pennsylvania, a professional horse ball player at one time, for instance, achieved the feat. And so did Representative Anderson of Ohio, who, like the heroes in Oliver Optic's books, arose from the humble walk of newsboy and boot-black.

Murphy of Missouri and Cushman of Washington, both, are proud to write in their little biographies that they were at one time railroad section hands. There are quite a number who declare they were cowboys and punchers.

To be a real representative of the people, however, especially if one comes from a rural district—it sounds best to be able to state in a biography that "he was born and reared on the farm." Exactly 54 representatives claim this distinction in the latest edition of the Congressional Directory. Two others—Webb of North Carolina and Carter of Oklahoma—however, have this "beat to a frazzle," when they proudly include the fact that they first saw light in a log-cabin. That is a master stroke. Needham of California has a distinction, which he makes much of in his biography—he was born on an emigrant wagon route to the great state of California.

Then as aspirant for congressional is able to tack a war record on career, it undeniably helps. The biography in the directory of men—that of Representative

Keifer of Ohio, who tells about himself in a matter of seven hundred and eighty words—has a whole lot about service in the Civil and Spanish-American wars. Keifer, however, is the only ex-speaker now a member of the House, so he is entitled to devote a little more space to himself than anyone else. The nearest approach to this is Southwick of New York, with four hundred and fifty words, and Southwick wasn't even a war veteran, let alone an ex-speaker.

Speaking of wars, it is noted that 20 members of the present House served in the Civil War—19 with the Union forces (two of these were awarded a medal of honor for bravery—Keifer of Ohio and Bradley of New York), and 11 with the boys in gray. Sixteen members either served directly in the Spanish-American war or joined regiments in anticipation of so doing. Representative Keifer has a further distinction in being the only member of the House who served in both struggles.

The parent from the other side of the water who has the hope of his son becoming a congressman should not despair. A member doesn't necessarily have to be a native of the United States. There are 15 in the present House who were born abroad. Of these, 4 were from Germany; one from England proper, and one each from Wales, Canada and Nova Scotia; two from Ireland, two from Scotland; two from Sweden, and one from Bohemia.

Modesty isn't necessarily an attribute in a congressman. There is only one really modest man in the House, when it comes to writing biographies—Robert Bruce Macon of Arkansas, who says all he wants to about himself in three lines—39 words. However, Macon makes up for this by being omnipresent on the floor of the House, and as he is of an inquisitive turn of mind he figures a lot in the Congressional Record—almost as much as Mann of Illinois, who earns his title of "Great Objector," by being on hand every minute of the day, and speaking a few words every sixty minutes.

America's Throne Room.

The cabinet room in the White House is America's nearest approach to a throne room. It is about the size of the diningroom in an average country house of the Colonial style. It is almost severely simple. The coloring is olive green and white—white woodwork with olive-green burlap on the walls.

The chairs of the president and his nine cabinet ministers, which surround the long mahogany table in the center of the room, are covered with green leather. The president's differs only from the others in that the back is a trifle higher. On a small metal plate on the back of each chair is the title of the holder and the date of his accession, but not his name. On one side of the cabinet table is a fireplace, with a very high mantelpiece over it. On the other is a capacious leather-covered divan. At one end of the table are the sliding-doors leading to the president's private office. At the other three large French windows, looking out across the White House grounds toward Pennsylvania avenue. There are leather-covered arm chairs in the corners. The room is practically without decoration. A room more completely symbolizing republican simplicity it would be difficult to imagine.
